DON STARCHER

IN MEMORY

Don Starcher, a beloved horticulture professor, died from cancer in August of 2002. His tenure at Potomac State College of West Virginia University spanned 24 years. Professor Starcher was known as someone who went beyond teaching and academic advising—he was a father figure to many students.

Well-known for his horticulture knowledge throughout the Northeast, Starcher was active in agriculture student housing and with the living-learning program in Reynolds Hall.

Professor Starcher was also an avid outdoorsman and bow hunter. He taught a bow hunters class to students, making bow hunting possible on campus property.

Mr. Starcher taught Ag/Forestry orientation, plant science, greenhouse and nursery management, trees and shrubs, turf management, and floral design. A graduate of West Virginia University, he had worked in private industries, including the former Mountaineer Greenhouse, prior to coming to Potomac State.

Professor Starcher loved working in the college greenhouse and was known around campus and in the local community for the beautiful plants he grew: poinsettias at Christmastime, mums in the fall, and vegetable plants for summer gardens. He brought cheer to the campus by delivering flowers to brighten the offices.

Don was also hired at Potomac State College in 1978 and would have also been honored this year for his years of service. This short article was reprinted with permission as read at Recognition Day.

CAROL S. WERTMAN

Carol is a native of Fairmont and graduated from Keyser High School. She graduated from Catherman's Business School in Cumberland and has completed several classes at Potomac State College.

Carol worked at the Kelly Springfield Tire Company in Cumberland for 5 years. She took time off from the working world to raise a family.

She has two daughters Ronda and Lori that graduated from Potomac State College. Both continued their education earning degrees in their chosen fields.

Carol began working part-time in the Student Affairs Office with Jack Hartman. When the grant was up she moved to the Service Office until a vacancy opened in the Business Office in 1981. She has served under five different administrators.

She states she has enjoyed her work with the college and hopes to continue until her retirement and then spend time spoiling her grandsons.
